Research Proposal Guide, Part I

Title: How to Write a Research Paper Introduction Without Developing an Overwhelming and Compulsive Urge to Kill

Author : Jeff Aspelmeier

Institution : Radford University

I. Introduction:

1. Thesis Statement : A sentence or paragraph that introduces the variables (concepts) of interest and provides the theoretical and/or applied reasons that we would expect to find a relationship between the variables that are being studied.

e.g. " The present study investigates further the biological predictors of individual differences in intense fear of small woodland creatures. A variety of mental health and medical service workers have noted the continuous demand for improved treatments for patients suffering from the ill effects of excessive exposure to small woodland creatures. However, relatively little attention has been directed toward identifying variables relevant to the prevention of this fur related phobia. Preliminary studies have focused on the biological correlates of intense feelings about animals. The present study extends this line of research."

2. Literature Review :

a) present a brief history of the field of study, including definitions of major terms and concepts and what they have been used to demonstrate or explain. Assume that the reader has some knowledge of the topic so a complete review is unnecessary. Be brief, but not too brief.

b) present the pertinent general findings of important studies.

- do so topically; present the major topics, relevant to your topic, that have been addressed by different studies that you have read.
- if two or more studies report the same relationship between the variables you are interested in, then describe them together. Be sure to address any relevant differences between these studies as well.

e.g., "Phobic reactions triggered by the presence of cute cuddly stimuli have been noted both in the lab and in clinical settings (Watson & Rainer, 1917; George & Man in the Yellow Hat, 1960; Tennessee & Chumly, 1971; for review see Sniffy, 2001). Though, not all investigations have focused specifically on cute woodland creatures these studies have consistently demonstrated that small fur bearing stimuli can elicit behavioral avoidance (Captain & Kangaroo, 1977; Tigger & Piglet, 1934), extreme negative emotionality (Watson & Rainer, 1917; Scooby & Shaggy, 1975), and anxiety/panic attacks (Garison & Hat, 2000).

Several studies have found that the size of one's spleen is associated with feelings of hostility toward and attraction to small woodland creatures (Aspelmeier, 2001; Smokey & Bear, 1997; Rocky & Bullwinkle, 1974; McKay, Garison, & Hat, 2000). McKay et al. (2000) also included emotional responses to barnyard animals (i.e. potbellied-pigs and chickens) in their measure of hostility and attraction."

- point out any areas in the literature that you feel are being neglected.
  - If you are using a new and different manipulation, predictor, or dependent variable emphasize this in your review of the earlier work.
    - e.g. "Though several studies have addressed the spleen and fur fear relationship, relatively little attention has been directed at identifying the role that the hepatic (liver) and pancreatic secretions play in determining one's fears regarding members of lower species.
  - If you are using a new method to address an old issue, emphasize how previous methodology is lacking.
    - e.g. "Almost all investigations of fur fear to date have made use of

It may not be similar to a business proposal, it should still look professional By Yang Wu, Open Resources Librarian, Clemson UniversityWriting a presentation proposal for an OER or Open Education conference can be a challenging task. Ensuring that your proposal aligns with the criteria outlined by the conference is a great way to make sure it fits with what reviewers will be looking for.Ã ÂÂ ÂÂ ÂKeep your proposal focused and well organizedAs you work to address the selection criteria and conference topics, be careful not to let the proposal go in too many different directions. You need a second opinion from them to improve the idea of your proposal and the clarity of expression.Never cite information in your proposal from unreliable sources. They want the conference to have the best quality presentations based on this criteria, and to make sure that the people they select are experts on OER and Open Education who have knowledge that conference participants want. Especially when you are required to write a Proposed your idea. While it is important that your proposal aligns with the selection criteria, make sure it is focused on your subject and consistent to read. Reviewers want to make sure that events are reflective, stimulate the participant's reflection on a subject and can hold their interest to the end. Depending on the conference, the criteria may give preference to proposed sessions that include reflection and evaluation on the presenter's work, contribute to academic research, or contain discussion on certain topics, such as diversity. Keep in mind that reviewers are also interested in â the content of their proposed session and what the audience can learn from attending to it. Even for conferences that don't, it's best to avoid this, since, in most cases, it doesn't add anything to your proposal and could introduce unnecessary biases. As someone who has successfully submitted multiple submission proposals and served on the Programming Committee of a major regional ERA conference, I would like to offer some tips on writing effective proposals based on my experiences: Proposals are more than just a synopsis of your presentation. Theme. A common trap is to overstep the allowed word limit that describes the novelty and importance of the proposed subject. Make sure your handwriting is easy to read and remove grammatical and spelling errors. However, that's really true, there are steps to writing a more effective conference proposal for you to block that unwanted feeling. View your proposal and check for errors and typographics. Expect less jargon, those terminologies that you can only understand.Master the details and give you a good feeling of the audience when you speak. Slowly. Submit your proposal in advance.
